

A Postcard from Cathy Neal

An afternoon at Denver Botanic Gardens yielded surprises around every corner. Although the garden emphasizes dryland gardening, there are many features which surprise and delight the visitor, such as the blue pots of papyrus in a shallow water feature at right. Meadows and grasses, a rock garden, cutting garden, Japanese garden, children's garden, conservatory and widespread use of containers and sculptures throughout provide something for everyone. The hillside shown above used to be a lawn but was converted to this beautiful low-maintenance groundcover; ice plant and blue fescue spill downhill from weathered pots.