After a week in Denver, we moved on to southern Colorado for a couple of weeks. Here's the view from my window in late September, making it very hard to do any work indoors! The aspen tree provides a touch of fall color to this landscape which is dominated by spruce and pine. Further up in the mountains, mountain mahogany and gambel oak add subtle shades of burgundy to dry hillsides. There are very few bright reds and oranges here, but the intensity of blue sky makes up for it.
