

Order the book:

They Sawed Up a Storm
6x9, softcover, 80 pages
$20

To order by credit card go to book website:

www.turkeypond.com

or make check out to:

UNH Cooperative Extension

Send to:

Forestry Information Center
211 Nesmith Hall
131 Main St
Durham, NH 03824-3597

Name: _____

Address: _____

City/Zip: _____

Number of copies: _____

Total enclosed: $ _____

They Sawed Up a Storm is a book about an extraordinary group of women who operated a sawmill during World War II at Turkey Pond in Concord, New Hampshire. The sawmill was built to saw the remains of logs still floating in the water from the 1938 hurricane. The hurricane caused a path of destruction from Long Island to northern New England. As a result, the federal government established The Northeast Timber Salvage Administration to recover the felled timber. Four years later, when the U.S. had entered WWII, the salvage program was still operating and struggled to find laborers. In 1942, copying other wartime industries that recruited women, the U.S. Forest Service built a sawmill and hired women to run it. The October 26, 1942, Concord Daily Monitor headline read, "Women-Operated Sawmill, First Of Kind in Country, Will Start Work Soon At Turkey Pond." Interviews, family stories and historic photographs bring the women of Turkey Pond to life.

They Sawed Up a Storm is Published by Jetty House/ Peter E. Randall Publisher, Portsmouth, NH.

UNIVERSITY of NEW HAMPSHIRE
COOPERATIVE EXTENSION