Grafton County, spanning from the Connecticut River east to the White Mountains, is known for its river bottom farmland and scenic mountain views. This past year, Extension economic development staff consulted with towns across the region, agricultural producers learned about food safety, forestry staff met with landowners and 4-H clubs welcomed new and returning members. Nutrition lessons were held at senior housing locations, shelters, elementary schools and Head Start programs. One community member observed, “4-H is such a wonderful program. Everyone learns so much and lifelong friendships are made.”
